3 Overview of activities for this workshop

Icebreaker

We will spend some time getting to know and understand each other, so we can work more effectively in this session and into the future. Prompts will encourage us to start thinking about community and collaboration.

Research Community Management 101 training

Cass will deliver a session on principles research community management (RCM). By the end of the session you should have an understanding of what RCM is, what skills are required for effective RCM, how communities can be structured for different goals, and how to think strategically about your stakeholders. You will be invited to apply the learning in real time to your own research communities.

Continuing development of ADR UK community recommendations

We will return to the shortlist of principles to be shaped into recommendations for ADR UK communities, as devised at the online workshop. As a group we will choose 2 from each of the vision, mission and participation sections to build out into explicit recommendations for how ADR UK communities should operate, incorporating learnings from the preceding training. We will form groups to operationalise 1 or more of the principles, and prioritise recommendations.

Next steps for your community

Building on the training and your own developed recommendations, we'll spend some time considering our own communities. These could be existing communities, or new communities you would like to establish. We will develop milestones for the next 3, 6 and 9 months, and consider the resources or activities you may require to reach those milestones. We will share our plans with the group for feedback and accountability.

Next steps for ADR UK recommendations

We will close with a reflection on the activities of this group, and a discussion of how your recommendations will be taken forward by ADR UK.

4 Coworking space (google drive)

We will be writing together in documents stored in the RCM Cooperative Google Drive. We have chosen to use a google drive due to ease of access and technical familiarity.

The link to the document area will be shared only with participants of in this workshop, and we ask you not to share it any further. Please do not share any confidential materials in the google drive documents, and be mindful of you own institutional recommendations around data safety.

The drive is currently available read only here. The materials will be made editable during the workshop.

✅ Where possible, please bring a laptop to the event so you can work on the materials in the google drive.
